Hammersley, a Name with a Story

Mayor of Hanley, Alderman E. J. Hammersley presented Hanley Park's beloved terracotta dragon fountain in 1894, but it wasn't originally quite the fountain you see today. The elaborate centrepiece of the park's Cauldon Grounds, four dragons (technically wyverns) sat proudly on its lower basin, spouting water into the fountain. Over the decades, the dragons disappeared and the fountain eventually stopped working.

Hanley Park was restored in the 2010s. The City of Stoke-on-Trent used old photographs and landscape architect T. H. Mawson's original designs for the park to recreate the four dragons. Having sat dry for at least 80 years, the restored fountain was switched back on in 2017.
